

To show the mother of all parties in London, there are a few vital ingredients to make the night go bang louder than the popping of champagne corks. These ingredients - Liz Brewer, the style guru of social events; bottles of champagne; the smell of money followed by a gaggle of celebrities and the urban air in the centre of London smoky. When the glamorous women would step out with fiery Cleo summer dress, flipping to jewellery and attired only in designer gowns with necklines plunging deeper than the Grand Canyon. Camera flash bulbs from the press would explode like fireworks as the celebrities pose and pose to grace the pages of Mojo, OK or Vibe. If you love a head of Liz Brewer, then you know you have entered - at least in the world of self-worship and the self-belief and filled in London. The heyday and essence of these high-profile social events and imagination is a persona guru of high society.

She describes herself as "someone who makes things happen". She runs the likes of Pasha Trump, Manley Boney, Richard Branson and a host of hip celebrities at her clubs and brunch. Having connections with the glitterati and movers and shakers of society at Ascot, Wimbledon or a well-stuffed arena is just part of her job. Her innovative skills and spectacular creation of magical events are much sought after by the higher echelon of society who wants to host events that Hell-or Taylor would scratch to cover. She is in effect a creator of very specialised events from a picnic on the banks of the Thames, launching a heavy product, discovering and nurturing new talents, to major-awarding charity events with the like and imagination that is simply Liz Brewer's. One of her most publicised charity events was 'Pete Dink Celebrity Auction' in aid of several cancer research organisations in which some celebrities were awarded to female celebrities and winners of achievement. They bid for deals with these stars for very high stakes in aid of charity. The event was blessed for millions of viewers and raised thousands of pounds.

Liz Brewer's success lies in her visionary goals and self-conviction. Most of all she really enjoys what she does and loves the challenge her work brings. She explains, "The key to success is to develop a network of useful contacts of people who are influential and decisive makers. It makes it easier to get things done." And certainly she certainly has - her list of helpful contacts is probably more precious than gold to her. It is her lifeline in the business she is in. Her success is further vindicated by a touch of 'dragon magic' when she declared, "I find feng shui fascinating and intriguing, as it co-relates with my own philosophy in life. I believe in making my dreams come true. I consider my goal and focus on achieving it. I have been very lucky in my career. Over the past 20 years, I have developed my own network of contacts that have enabled me to be very successful in my business.

Since discovering Feng Shui a few years ago through The House of Feng Shui and reading Lillian Tu's books, I feel I am more in tune with the environment in my home. For example, now I always make a point to keep my fire-stove doors and to close the toilet door. I shifted my desk to my best direction and continuously try to keep with my head pointed to my auspicious direction. The benefits have been tremendous, especially since I signed the Three-Legged Toad. I have not had ailing in my desk and no longer one in the hallway facing the front door to attract prosperity back. I could not believe the luck the toad has brought me. Out of the blue, I was left a large sum of money in a will by an old friend who had only died. It was quite unexpected. Then I was a bit over-generous a magazine and was awarded more money than I had anticipated. I am sure my toad and my good feng shui have something to do with the class of very successful women."

Liz enjoys all the trappings of a high life in the pulsating tempo of the city and fitness. But behind all the fun and glamour lies the anxiety and sheer hard work that contributes to her success and fame for the life style she now enjoys. There is a jolt of fuel with a precision of energy to handle a punishing schedule adeptly, handily without a secretary. To maintain her vibrant health she follows a very strict health regime abstaining from red meat. The unstoppable style guru has also just launched her new book 'The Fairy Bible' on how to negotiate parties and tips on dress code and etiquette. Such is the spirit of Liz Brewer's story that as the woman a side-view view is following her around to film a documentary about her life and her work. Liz plays hard and works even harder! A lady obviously enjoying great success influenced by her sheer joie de vivre and a life blessed with respect and being liked. ■
